WATER COMMUNICATION BETWEEN WASHINGTON AND BALTIMORE.—The National Intelligencer states that it is seriously talked of at Washington, to cut a capacious canal from that city to a point from twenty to thirty miles eastwardly on the Patuxent river, or its tributary, the Western branch where the water is deep enough to accommodate vessels of considerable burden, and so to avoid for a large amount of freight and other produce, the circuitous navigation of the Potomac river, and the bay between Point Lookout and Cedar Point, thereby saving two hundred miles in the water route to Baltimore.

under the command of Capt. Broadwell, came to the levee last evening with the largest load of new cotton yet received this season, and a very respectable one, too, all things considered. It comprised 1,385 bales. It is to be hoped this indication of progress towards seasonable business will prove reliable, and that we shall now begin to "go-ahead" in earnest .- N. O. Picayune, 4th.
